Work in Progress

Cinema and Everyday Life in 1940s and 1950s Spain: An Oral History. (Co-author) The book draws on 120 interviews with cinema-goers in Madrid and Valencia, who remember and reflect on the role of cinema in their everyday lives during a period characterized by political repression and material hardship. Rather than a concern with establishing a record of what films were seen by whom, the focus of the individual chapters considers the ways in which cinema-going facilitated particular forms of subjectivity and lifestyle, and with the ways in which this is relayed through memory and narrative.

Film Magazines, Fashion and Photography in 1940s and 1950s Spain. (Co-author) Building on the research undertaken for the oral history of cinema-going, which identified Spanish film magazines of the period as a rich source of information about the collective imaginary of the early Franco period, this book analyzes a wide range of film, fashion, women's and general interest magazines in order to explore how they interpellated readers, intersecting with everyday life practices and identity constructions, as well as serving as a forum for debate on cinema and fashion.
